Background

6. Belarus is a former Eastern European Soviet Republic, with a population of over 10 million which gained its independence on 25 August 1991, and claims to be a republic. Since 1994 the country has been run by president Alexander Lukashenko (over 3 terms). The constitution of the country has over the years been revised to give the president almost unlimited powers and no terms in office restrictions, something that has caused concern for international human rights organizations and activists. The Belarusian government has so far joined the following international conventions and treaties:

b) International convention on the Elimination of all forms of Racial Discrimination
c) International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights
d) International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights
e) Optional Protocol on the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights
f) Convention on the Non-applicability Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity
g) International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid
h) International Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women
i) International Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment
j) International Convention against Apartheid in Sport

Causes for Concern

7. Even though Belarusian government’s actions in joining the aforementioned conventions is notable, but the violation and disregard of several of these instruments are some of the concerns that as a human rights NGO the ODVV has. During the rule of the present government in Belarus, there have been several instances of persecution, some which include the disappearance of a number of former government officials such as the Minister of Interior, the former director of the elections commission, a well-known businessman, a journalist and a presidential photographer, among several other not so well-known individuals. Although the government has on numerous occasions promised to conduct investigations, but to-date no serious action has been taken. Another cause for concern for human rights organizations is the way in which the Belarus government treats the press and journalists. Strict control and restrictions against the press and media are policies that the governments continues to use.

Recommendations
8. While expressing its deep concern over the forced disappearances in Belarus, the ODVV calls upon the government and authorities to investigate and rectify the situation. The ODVV also calls upon the Human Rights Council as an official human rights institution to follow up on Belarus’ commitments.

9. The violation of freedom of expression and treatment of journalists and writers is another issue that must seriously be looked into. Although the past tradition and conditions of this country in treating journalists has played a key role, but as an independent country which claims to being a republic, Belarus must provide better conditions for the media.
